SEAS TORE UP SOME LANDINGS

Purser Willburton of the steamer Kauai reports that the woodwork at the Kukuihaele landing was carried away during the northerly gale which blew on November 25. The vessel was unable to work its cargo at Huelo on November 22. Last Saturday it became very rough again at Kukuihaele.

Purser Friel of the W. G. Hall reports that the steamer Mikahala could not work her freight on Friday while at Waimea on account of the rough seas. At Koloa and Elele the swells were breaking over the landing. The Hall was unable to work out her freight for a day or two.

Purser Friel also reports that McBryde plantation on Kauai starts to grind cane tomorrow. Koloa begins grinding yesterday.

The little schooner Kawaihine lost her jib-boom in a squall off Mokapu Point last Saturday while en route to Honolulu from Koolau ports.

NAVAL SEA-WALL IS STRENGTHENED

Certain sections of the sea wall at the Naval Station slips have been gradually giving away, and the station authorities, under the direction of Captain Niblack, are at work strengthening the whole wall. Just at the Waikiki side of Naval Dock No. 2 the underdrill gave way leaving only the cement wall above, the tide washing in and out at pleasure. The pile-driver was brought into requisition yesterday and three inch planks, iron-shod at one end and driven down into the mud and coral just outside the sea-wall. The space on the street side will be dug out and bags of cement and sand thrown in.

It is the intention of the captain of the yard to also run pipes from the street so that surface water may be drained off.

IROQUOIS LOSES OLD SMOKESTACK

After having been thirteen years away from the Union Iron Works of San Francisco where she was built, and six years from the Mare Island Navy Yard, the U. S. S. Iroquois, station ship of the Honolulu Naval Station, is about to glory in a new smokestack. The old one has seen hard service, and had at least sixteen holes. In fact it was liable to topple over in a heavy sea and do damage to the trim little vessel. Yesterday the contractors, Catton, Neil & Co., rigged a derrick and lifted out the old one.

Nevadan Comes Direct.

The American-Hawaiian S. S. Co. gives notice that the steamer Nevada will sail from San Francisco for Honolulu direct on December 13.
